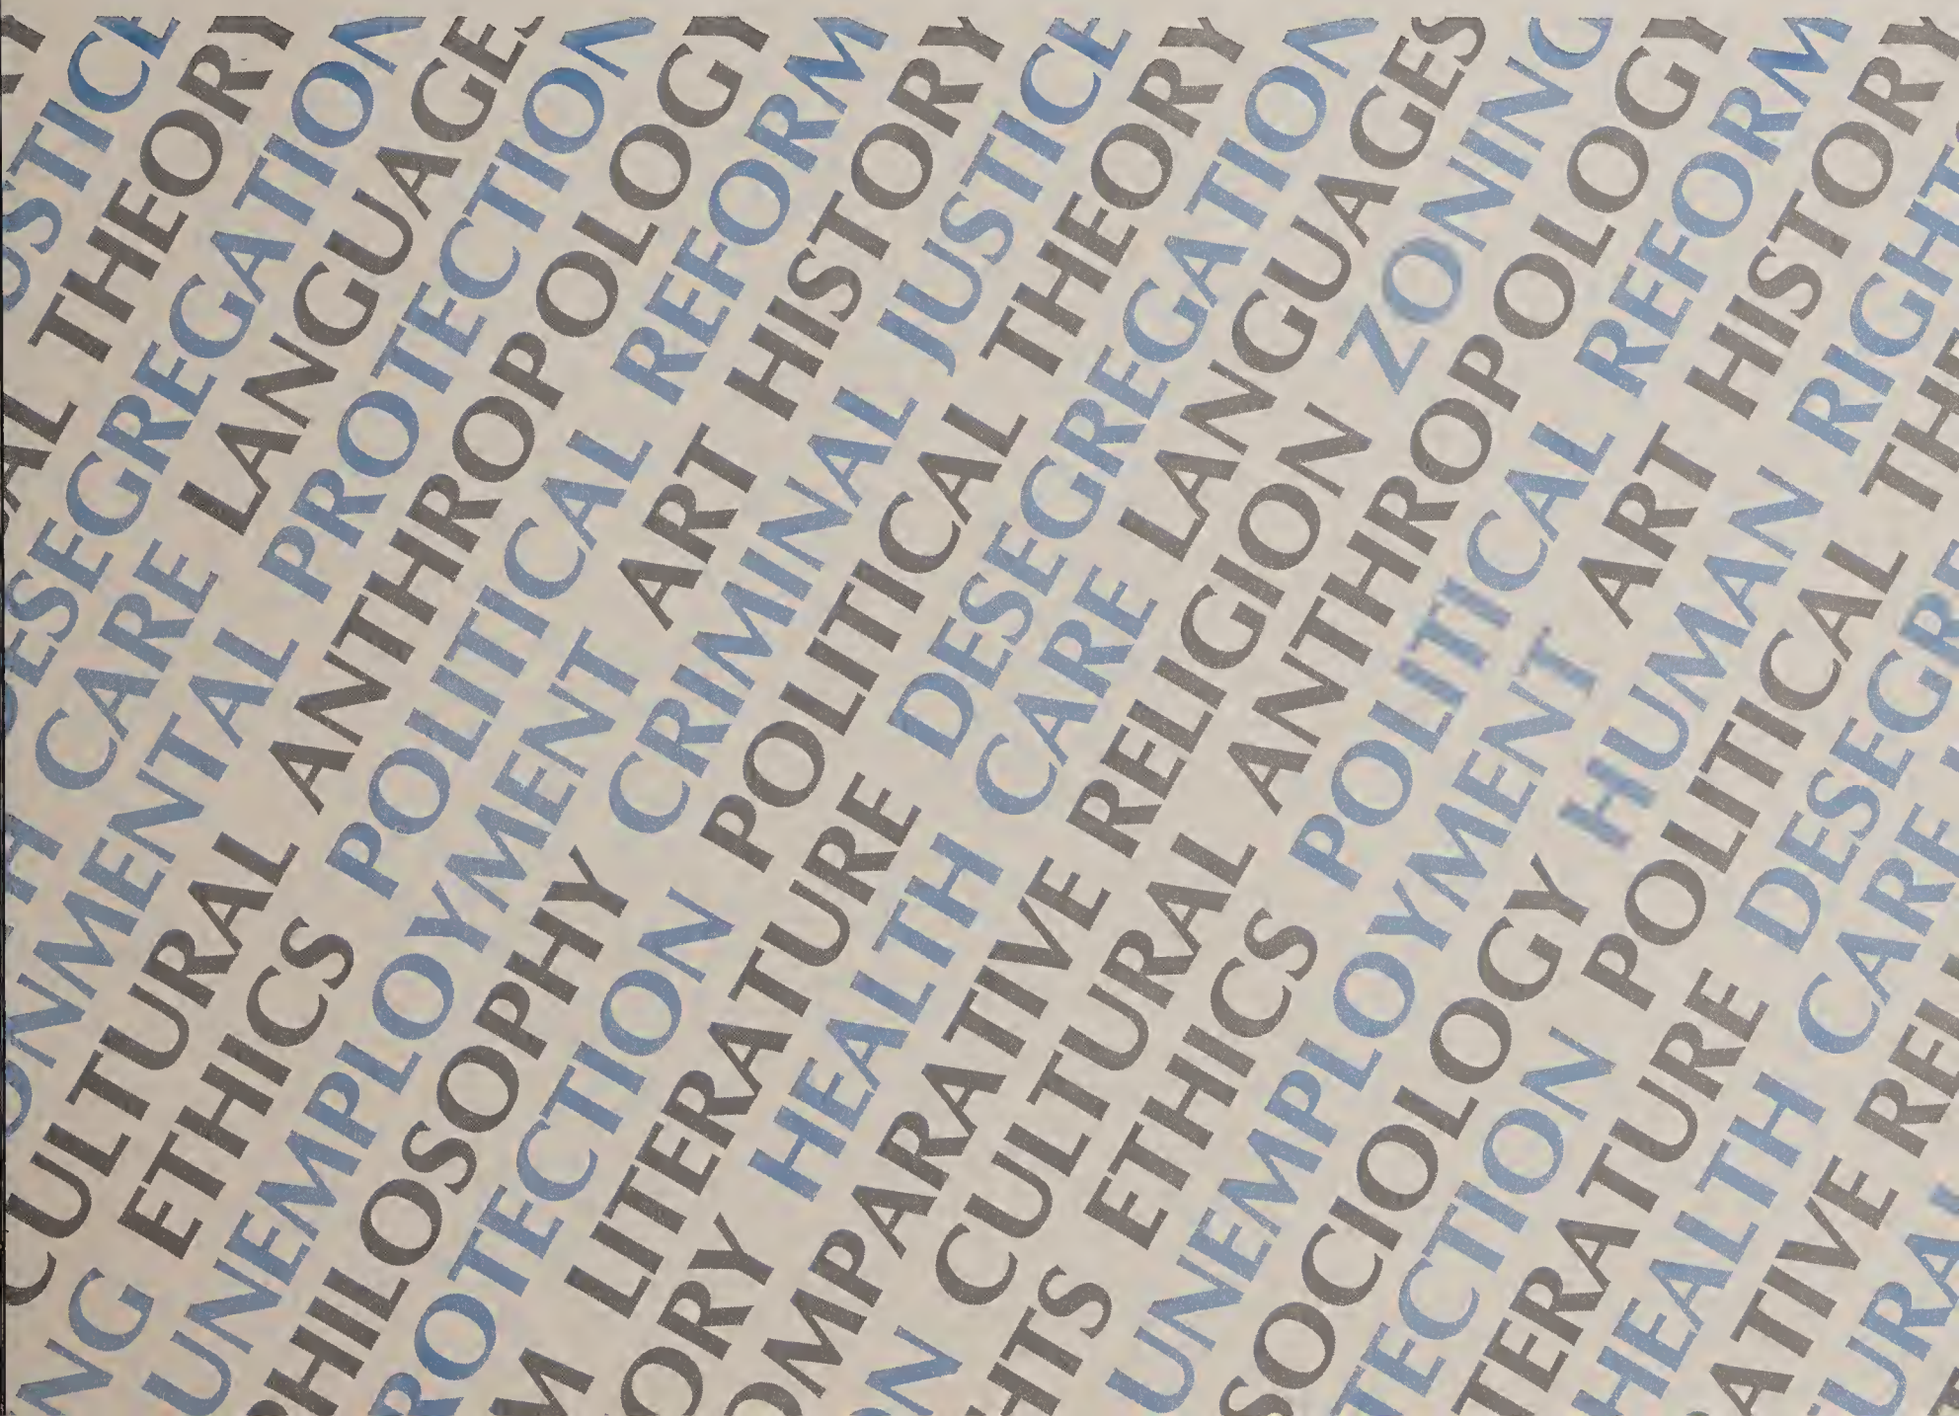
CALIFORNIA COUNCIL FOR THE HUMANITIES IN PUBLIC POLICY

FIVE YEAR REPORT 1974-1979



CCHPP — THE FIRST FIVE YEARS

Dilemmas which face modern society seem at times to be so complex and technical as to defy solution. "Solutions" often turn out to be more detrimental than the original problem. What is called for, it sometimes seems, is not a more sophisticated form of social engineering but rather new visions — new ways of thinking about society's problems.

The California Council for the Humanities in Public Policy was initiated in an attempt to foster new visions of a particular sort. Created in 1974 by a small group of Californians in cooperation with the National Endowment for the Humanities, the fledgling Council assumed an imposing task: to encourage the disciplines of the humanities to address the difficult practical problems of public life.

The planning group began with the ambitious assumption that insights of the historian or ethicist might be as important as those of the engineer or economist to the solution of social policy questions.

This is the report of the first five years of that idea. The Council is pleased now to present to the California public a record of this initial period. Although the program is still young and growing, it can lay claim to significant accomplishments during its short life.

CCHPP-sponsored programs have brought to millions of Californians a better and deeper understanding of public policy issues. Projects have had a direct impact on the thinking of policy-makers who have found themselves otherwise too enmeshed in day-to-day crises to take time for broader reflection. Humanists ranging in disciplines from classics to contemporary literature have gained a better acquaintance with the realities of contemporary issues and a better understanding of the interests and insights of adult audiences.

The first five years have also been a period of learning. Experiences with diverse policy topics, formats, humanities disciplines, and program settings have brought to the Council a greater appreciation of effective modes of interchange between humanists and policy-makers, a grasp of important demands of media programs, and a clearer perception of public concerns and needs. The CCHPP program for 1979 reflects this learning process, and we will continue to modify and guide our program in response to the encouragement and criticisms of the public.

Those familiar with the early CCHPP program will remember that the first primary focus of activity was the area of humanities and public policy. Beginning with the planning process in the fall of 1974, the Council solicited suggestions for the development of the state program through a series of conferences held throughout the state, a Field Poll, and countless conversations involving Council members, staff, policy-makers, community representatives and individuals.

As a result, in the spring of 1975 the Council chose a theme which seemed to tie together many of the extraordinarily diverse ideas and suggestions received during the planning period. The theme, "The Pursuit of Community in California," catching the sense of quest for roots and common purpose in the state, seemed to strike a responsive chord in every region and social group; indeed it has served so well that the Council continues to use it as an overall focus for the state program in the current grant period.

The first grants to community groups and academic institutions were awarded in May, 1975. Since that time, the Council has awarded a total of 247 grants for a sum of $2,002,723 for projects involving a vast number of groups and individuals in California. Recipients have ranged from a Chamber of Commerce in a tiny border town in far northern California to major statewide civic organizations and governmental agencies. Topics have been as diverse as "A History of Migrant Women Farmworkers" to "The Future of Immortality." Scholars from every major discipline of the humanities have served as speakers and consultants; history, philosophy, and literature have been especially well represented.

The Council itself has grown and expanded. From an original nine members designated by the NEH, the Council now numbers 20, and the membership reflects the stimulating diversity of the California population. Nominations for public and academic members are continuously solicited from individuals and groups in the state; members are chosen for their excellence in their professions, demonstrated leadership abilities, commitment to the demanding work of the Council, diversity of background, and breadth and depth of experience.

In 1976, with the passage of the new Congressional authorizing legislation for the NEH, the state councils were given greater latitude to determine their own goals and areas of grantmaking. No longer were they required to focus exclusively on the arena of humanities and public policy. Desiring to ascertain what Californians felt about possible new directions, the CCHPP again conducted meetings in every part of the state, this time to ask how the Council might provide assistance to public projects in the humanities outside the field of public policy.

The results were striking. Strong support was voiced for a continuation of the public policy emphasis, but recommendations were also made for the addition of smaller grant categories to meet popular needs, especially to accommodate interests in social history and broader cultural programs. As a consequence, the Council created new grant categories in Local and Cultural History, Programs for the Occupations, Multi-disciplinary Seminars, Innovative Public Programs in the Humanities, and Humanities Projects in Public Radio and Television. Currently, exciting projects in each of these categories are reaching new constituencies and exploring new topic areas with the distinctive insights of the humanities.

What might the overall impact be said to be after these first years of Council-sponsored public activities in the humanities in California? The Council, of course, takes pride in the awards won by CCHPP-funded radio and television programs; frequent reports of success from public groups, policy-makers and humanists; good attendance figures; favorable press notices.

But the most meaningful, somehow, are the individual vignettes which express what the late Charles Frankel described as the essence of the humanities, "a curious combination of involvement and detachment; of the search for scientific objectivity and irrepressible personal idiosyncracy; of piety towards the past and the critique of the past; of private passion and public commitment." A news reporter who avows that her entire approach toward reporting has changed as a result of her contact with the humanities; a labor official who feels he has suddenly discovered the real roots of his personal and professional past after a summer humanities seminar; a statewide citizens group which now regularly includes humanists in the planning and development of its major programs as the result of an initial humanities grant; and a high school student who has begun to read seriously for the first time in her life after her experience in a "Humanist-in-the-Schools" program — these are the results that make the program worth doing, and they are the kind of results we will continue to strive for in the coming year.

FOOTNOTES

1. All CCHPP grants must be matched by at least an equivalent amount in local funds or in-kind goods and services generated by the sponsor. The figure shown is based on the final narrative report submitted by the sponsor. If the amount shown is less than the grant award, the sponsor did not use the full amount of the grant award and returned the unused portion to the Council.
2. Through the NEH's "Challenge Match" provision, the Council offers a possible 85 percent match to outside, non-federal cash contributions to the NEH for the support of approved projects in addition to the initial CCHPP grant and local match requirements. The figures shown in this column are the total amount of Challenge Match funds awarded to the projects as of December 31, 1978. The generation and disbursement of these funds may overlap into subsequent grant periods.
3. Sponsor returned grant award to the Council.
4. Project shows no In-Kind figure at this time because project has not been completed yet.
5. Many projects awarded in the sixth quarter of this period will not show an In-Kind figure because many projects are continuing up to the present or have yet to submit their final report. Consequently, the In-Kind sub-total figure will be considerably lower than that of the grant award.
6. This grant period will be completed March 31, 1979. Because most of these projects were recently funded, they are still continuing up to the present.
7. Funds for these awards are available only through the "Challenge Match" provision. Therefore, no figure is showing in the first column. The figure represents the amount of "Challenge Match" funds authorized for the project.
